

With the need to commute to the bay area quite frequently, I have found XM to be extremely helpful. Especially when needing constant traffic info. I dislike having to listen to 10 min. of commercials and news just to get another update. And being that I am paying for "premium" services I should not be subjected to the same tortures I receive listening to free public broadcast. I cannot remember the last time I have listened to public radio broadcast. It seems that for a digitally connected world, the local broadcasters are still antiquated in wireless technologies and FCC should be spending their time implementing new technologies in broadcasting.

Thank You

Jesse Perez